A LABOR OF LOVE

The 2024 Arizona Golf Course Overseeding Schedule

Every year, about 85 percent of Arizona golf courses, the majority residing at or beneath 3,000 feet in elevation, undergo the process of overseeding their properties.

The process is, what some would call, a labor of love as it requires a time-consuming, diligent effort to create lush, green playing surfaces for Arizona's peak golf season, which runs from October through March. Much like a grizzly bear does in the winter, bermudagrass takes this time to hibernate and let its snow-birding friend, ryegrass, steal the show.

In an effort to keep Arizona golfers informed, the AZ GOLF team has spent countless hours (although much less than courses will during this time) to compile the most accurate overseeding schedule available in the great state of Arizona.

A special thank you to ArizonaGolfVacations.com for also working to gather overseeding dates, as well as Eric Hickenlooper, Kathryn Laux, and Sharon Goldstone.

OVER OVERSEEDING?

Choosing not to overseed is becoming more of a prevalent decision, especially in a state with increasingly limited access to water. However, the decision to overseed or to not overseed is far from simple and accounts for a variety of variables — course bottom line, access to play throughout mandatory overseeding shutdown, weight of sustainability vs. economic impact, and of course, playing conditions.

It's also worth noting that 75 percent of the clubs not overseeding reside at an average elevation of 4,807 feet. Courses such as Bison Golf Club and Birdie Ranch Golf Club near Show Low grow a perennial Kentucky Bent Grass that does not need to be overseeded like the bermudagrasses found on southern courses. Due to cooler climates and higher elevations, many northern courses benefit from the ability to grow perennial grass species. Southern courses might choose to take a year off to save some money, while others choose to simply “embrace the brown.”
